

ACEL JOURNALS

ACEL's in-house journals, The Australian Educational Leader and Leading and Managing are an informative collation of articles and papers by leading academics and educators from Australia and beyond.

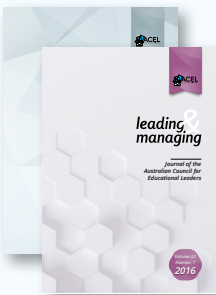

ael The Australian Educational Leader (AEL)

ACEL's Australian Educational Leader (AEL) publication, is recognized nationally and internationally as a practical journal for the exchange of current research, trends, and innovations. It is proven to be a valuable resource to assist in the development of leading educational practices using contemporary techniques.

This journal, published quarterly, is fundamentally concerned with the improvement of leadership and management of daily practices in schools. It brings together various perspectives from practitioners and gives opportunities to share expertise. The AEL provides insights into the changing school culture and the dynamics of the evolving teacher-teacher and teacher-student interactions. AEL's platform also aims to encourage collegial discourse among teachers and leaders by promoting collaboration between schools, professional associations and university educators.

leading & managing Leading & Managing (L&M)

Leading and Managing (L&M) is an international, peer-refereed academic journal published twice a year by ACEL. It publishes on education management and leadership in the widest sense: on the management of schools, and of further and higher education institutions; and on administration and policy at all levels - institutional, local, national and international. L&M also focuses on research-based developments in pedagogy, classroom and school culture, school improvement and system-wide reform.

L&M aims to maintain a balance of practice and theory directed towards the complementary phases of leading and managing in educational administration. L&M is targeted at personnel working at all organisational levels of education and in all sectors and systems, and those interested in educational developments.
